International Standard Setting

Last Modified:

APHIS is the primary U.S. agency in charge of animal and plant health issues associated with trade. We work with U.S. trading partners to make sure that trade follows science-based international standards. These standards support free, consistent global trade while protecting U.S. agricultural health.

Animal Health Standards

The Veterinary Services Deputy Administrator, also known as the Chief Veterinary Officer (CVO), is the U.S. Delegate to the World Organisation for Animal Health (WOAH). The CVO manages U.S. animal health standard-setting activities and coordinates U.S. comments on animal health standards proposed for adoption.
